

Blake Hall is the Founder and CEO of ID.me, the next-generation digital identity platform that is simplifying how individuals prove and securely share their identity online. Under Blake's leadership, ID.me became one of four companies in the United States of America to earn federal accreditation to bind a legal identity to a digital login. Government agencies, healthcare organizations, financial institutions and retailers are using ID.me to verify the identity of customers. ID.me's technology supports more than 200 partners across industries, including the Department of Veteran Affairs, USAA, and Ford. Prior to founding ID.me, Blake was an Army Ranger where he led a platoon of scouts and snipers hunting high value targets in Iraq and was awarded the Bronze Star with Valor. Blake holds a Bachelor of Science magna cum laude from Vanderbilt University and an MBA from Harvard Business School.
